Overview

ABC began threatening cancellation for the show, as the show's ratings were declining and Fred Silverman, one of the show's biggest backers at ABC, had left for NBC in early 1978.[4] ABC was going to choose between two shows: _Scooby-Doo_ or an unaired pilot from Ruby-Spears Enterprises.[5] Therefore, for its 1979–1980 season, _Scooby-Doo_ was given a major overhaul, adding the character of Scooby's nephew Scrappy-Doo, voiced by Lennie Weinrib, and changing the name of the show to _Scooby-Doo and Scrappy-Doo_.[6][7]

Although still present in these episodes, the characters of Fred, Daphne, and Velma became less essential to the plot, and it became more of a concentrated effort to try to make them relevant, once the new character Scrappy-Doo was added to the cast. To Silverman, the addition of Scrappy-Doo, Shaggy, Scooby and Scrappy were the main focus. Merla Frumkin took over Pat Stevens' role as Velma Dinkley towards the end of the season, beginning with episode six, "The Ghoul, the Bat, and the Lizzy".
